

Opinion

The Phnom Penh Post
ភ្នំពេញ ប៉ុស្ត
 www.phnompenhpost.com

EDITORIAL PERSONNEL

Publisher
Ross Dunkley
Editor-in-Chief
Alan Parkhouse
Managing Editor
John Yeager
Editor-in-Chief Post Khmer
Kay Kimsong
Managing Editor Post Khmer
Sam Rith
Chief of Staff
Cheang Sokha
Deputy Chief of Staff
Chhay Channyda
National News Editor
Chad Williams
Deputy News Editor
Vong Sokheng
Group Business Editor
Stuart Alan Becker
Deputy Business Editor
May Kunmakara
Business Sub Editor
Gregory Pellechi
Property Editor
Rupert Winchester
Foreign News Editor
Dan Besant
Sports Editor
Dan Riley
Pictorial Editor
Will Baxter
Lifestyle Editorial Director
Peter Olszewski
7Days Editor
Sean Gleeson
Lifestyle Editor
Poppy McPherson
Deputy Head of Lifestyle Desk
Pan Simala
Copy Editor
Michael Phillips
Sub Editors
David Boyle, Shane Worrell, Stuart White, Joseph Freeman, Justine Drennan, Rachel Will

Reporters
Meas Sokchea, Morn Kuntheart, Khouth Sophak Chakrya, May Titthara, Khuon Leakhana, Kim Yuthana, Roth Meas, Ung Chamroeun, Sen David, Phak Seangly, Rann Reuy, Buth Reaksmeay Kongkea, Chhim Sreyneang, Siam Bunthy, Lieng Sarith
Chief Photographers
Meng Kimlong, Sreng Meng Srun, Heng Chivoan, Pha Lina, Hong Menea
Regional Correspondent
Roger Mitton
Director, Post Digital
Jesse Gage
Web Editors
Justin Heifetz, Leang Phannara
Webmasters
Seng Sovan, Uong Ratana, Horg Pengly

SIEM REAP BUREAU

Bureau Chief
Peter Olszewski
Executive Assistant
Thik Skaline
Distribution Manager
Seng Sech
Reporter
Thik Kalyann
Marketing Executive
Sophearith Blondeel

PRODUCTION & PRINTING

Head of Desktop Publishing
Nhim Sokphyrak
Desktop Publishing
Suon Savatdy, Tim Borith, Tep Thoeun, Thyda Chum Sokunthy, Yousou Hafisoh, Aim Valinda

POST MEDIA

HEAD OFFICE

Post Media Co., Ltd.
888, Building F, 8th floor,
Phnom Penh Center,
Cnr Sotheasos & Sihanouk Blvd,
Chamkarmon, Phnom Penh, Cambodia
Tel: 023 214 311, 0214 311-017
Fax: 023 214 318

SIEM REAP

No 629, Street 6 Dangum Commune
Tel: 063 966 290, Fax: 063 966 590

Chief Executive Officer
Chris Dawe
Chief Operating Officer
Chan Davy

SALES DEPARTMENT

Sales Manager
Borom Chea
Account Directors
Chap Narith, Rosaly Tin
Marketing and Sales Executive
Nget Thach

CIRCULATION & DISTRIBUTION

Circulation Director
Sophia Kalvin Heng
Circulation Supervisor
Heng Sokal
Distribution Manager
Meas Thy

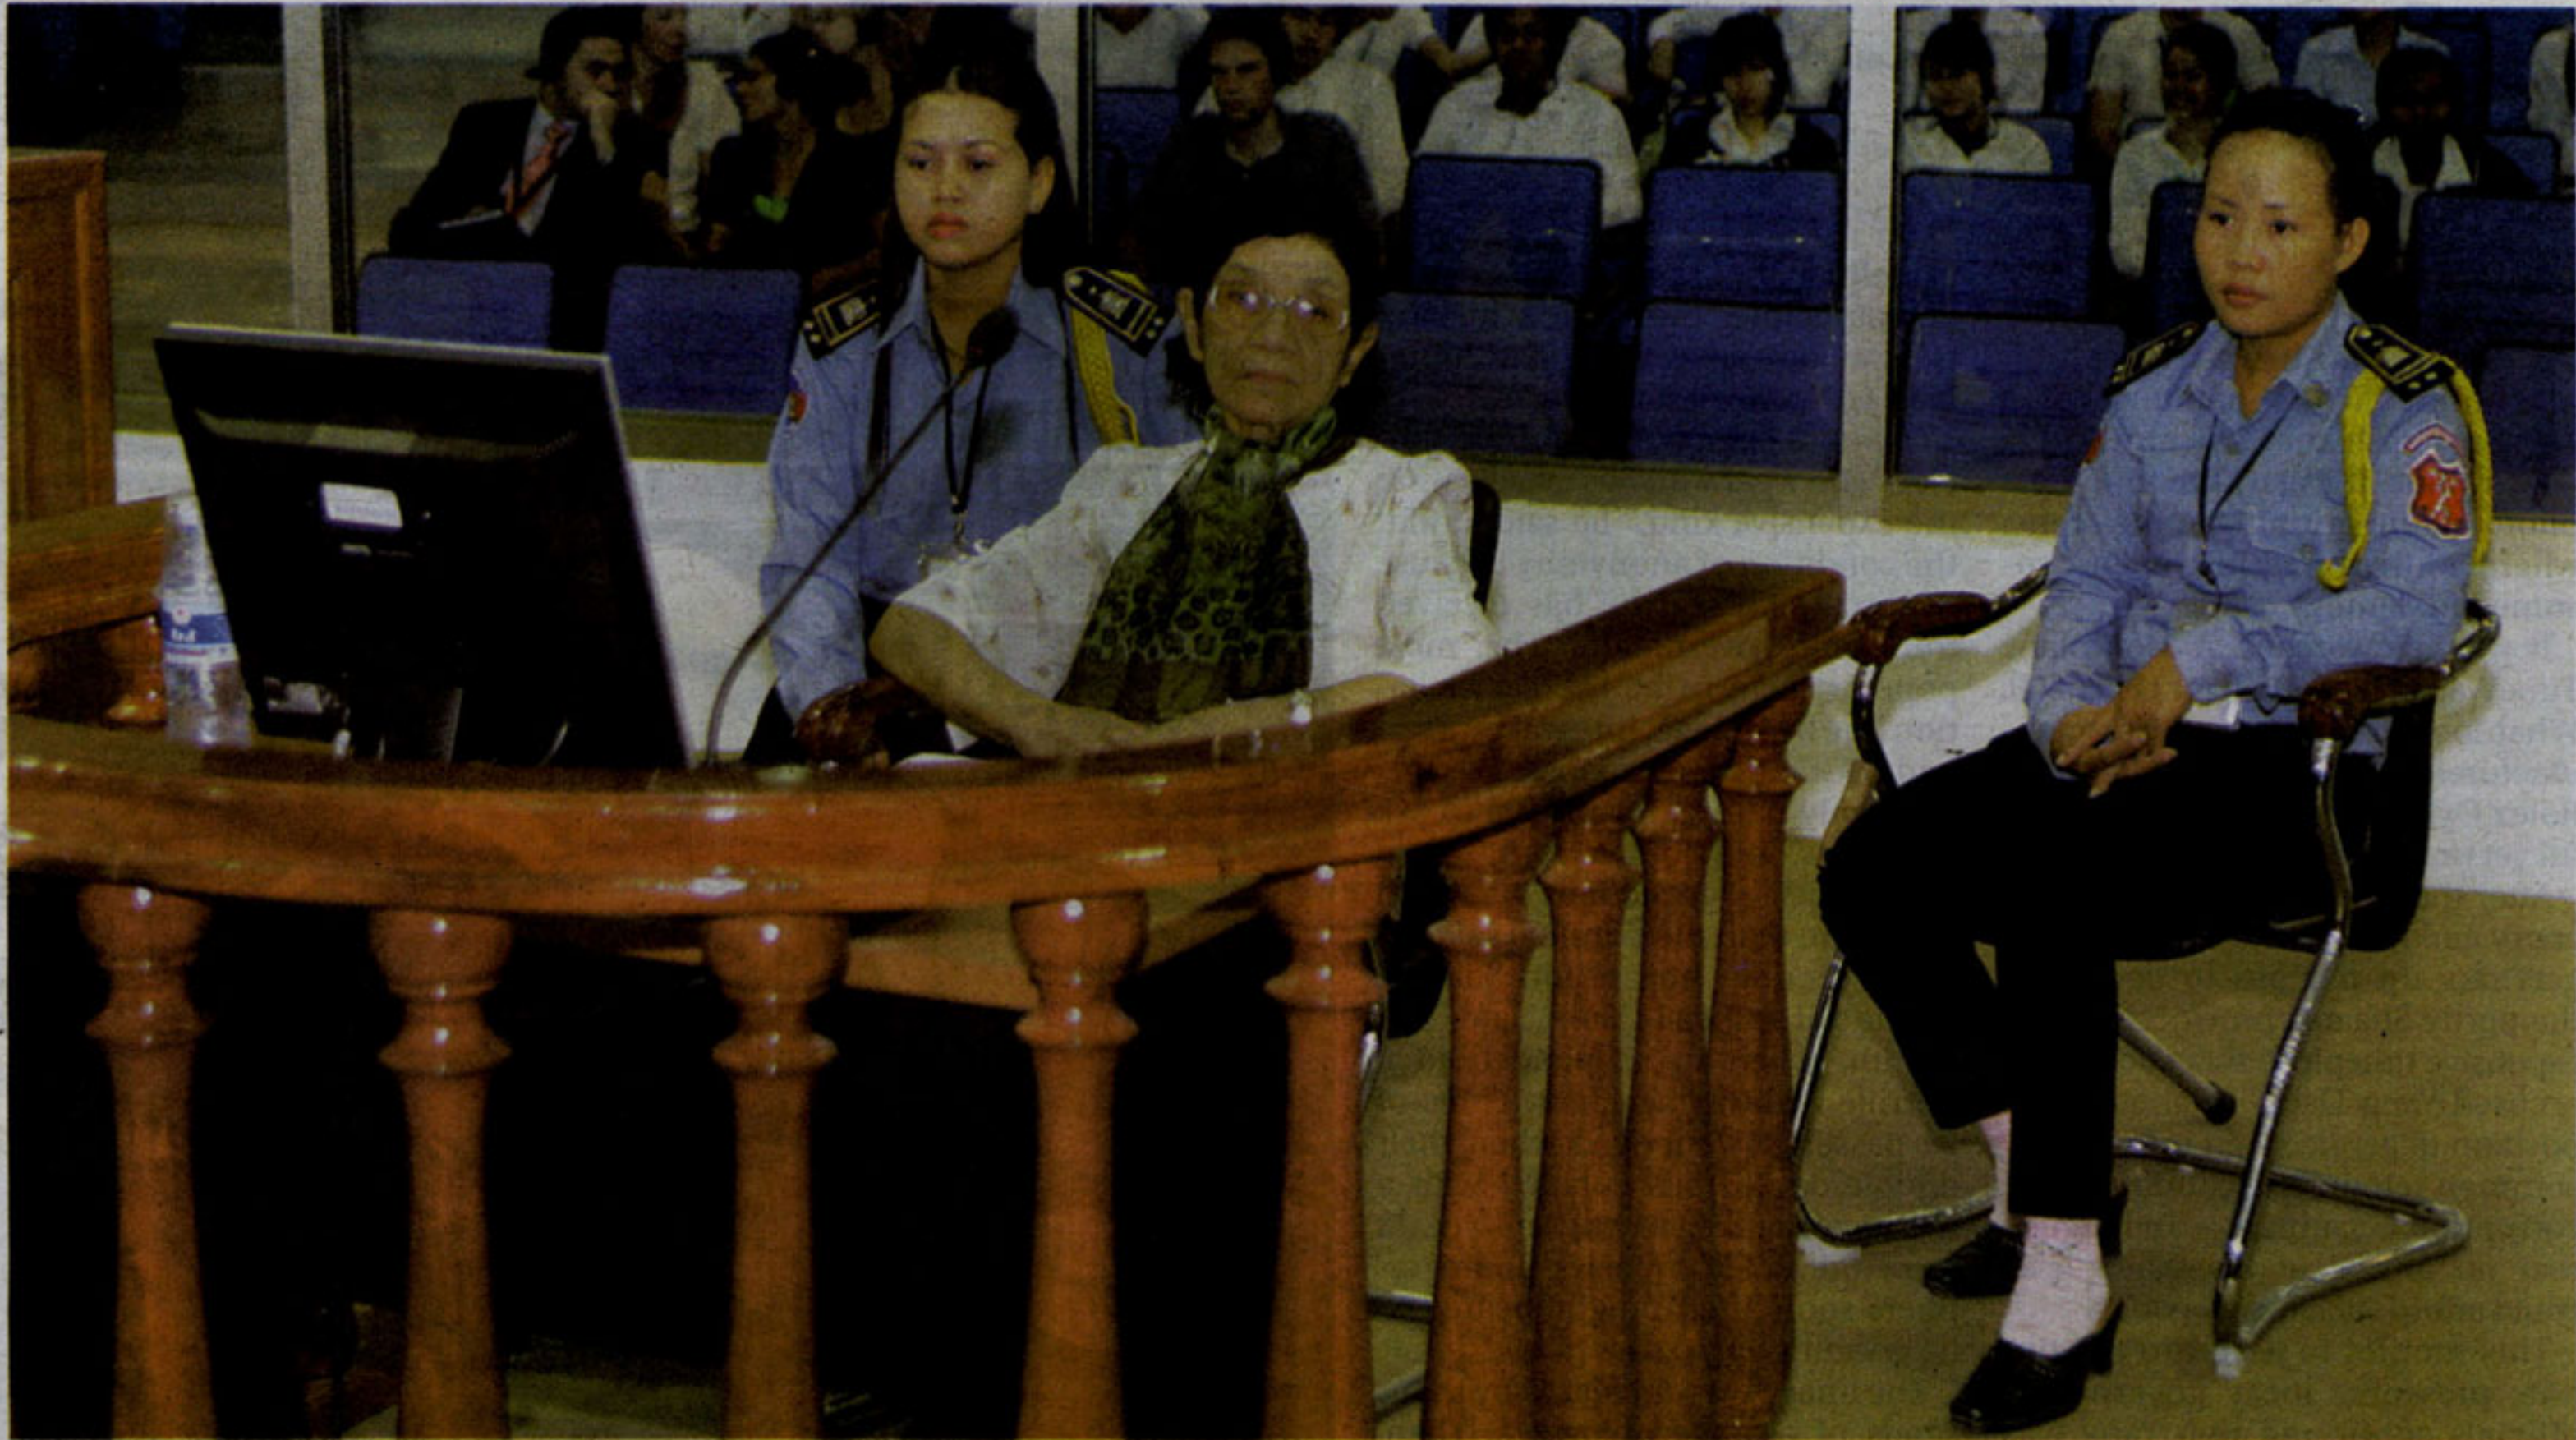

ADMINISTRATION

HR Manager
Buth Lina
Assistants to HR Manager
Rithy Sormeta, Pov Linna
Chief Accountant
Heang Tangmeng
Treasurer
Sren Vicheka, Sok Sophorn, Keo Puthy

System Administration
Seng Nak, Vong Dun

TO CONTACT US
newsroom@phnompenhpost.com advertising@phnompenhpost.com subscription@phnompenhpost.com webmaster@phnompenhpost.com
www.phnompenhpost.com

© Post Media Co, Ltd
The Phnom Penh Post is wholly owned and printed by Post Media Co Ltd. The title The Phnom Penh Post in either English or Khmer languages, its associated logos or devices and the contents of this publication may not be reproduced in whole or in part without the written consent of Post Media Co Ltd.
www.phnompenhpost.com

Ieng Thirith (centre), social affairs minister under the Khmer Rouge regime, sits in the dock during her pre-trial chamber public hearing at the ECCC in February, 2009. REUTERS

When justice seems unfair

Comment
Youk Chhang

THE Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC) recently confirmed that Case 002 accused Ieng Thirith was unfit to stand trial as a result of suffering a progressive form of cognitive impairment.

Although it was long anticipated, this news remains a difficult reality for many victims of the Khmer Rouge to accept.

This is especially true when Ieng Thirith's specific role in the Khmer Rouge movement is considered. She has routinely been mislabelled the "First Lady" of the Khmer Rouge in the international press – a title that is both inaccurate and misleading.

Ieng Thirith was not a passive individual who became linked to the Khmer Rouge solely through her status as Ieng Sary's wife and Pol Pot's sister-in-law; she was an influential party member who wielded nation-wide power as the regime's Minister of Social Affairs.

Indeed, in this role, Ieng Thirith was personally and directly involved in denying Cambodians even the most basic of health care during the regime's years in power.

So for the victims, Ieng Thirith's access to world-class health care and multiple medical experts stands in stark contrast to the improvised, and often deadly, brand of "health care" she helped the Khmer Rouge impose.

In addition to the special medical attention Ieng Thirith has been receiving, it is also difficult for victims – and, indeed, all Cambodians – to accept the especially vigorous enforcement of her rights taking place at the ECCC.

Even the most basic defence rights remain a largely abstract concept in Cambodian courts, so the ECCC's statements about fair-trial rights and the rights of an accused are strange and foreign concepts to the average Cambodian person.

Again, the failings of Cambodia's criminal justice system are largely a legacy of the Khmer Rouge's decimation of Cambodia's institutions and civil society, creating a palpable sense of injustice for victims who see Ieng Thirith receiving a level of due process no Cambodian accused can expect when prosecuted even for minor crimes in local courts.

But even if Ieng Thirith ultimately wins the race against time and accountability and is never prosecuted for her role in the Khmer Rouge, this unfortunate turn of events could still be utilised as part of the larger transitional justice process taking place in Cambodia.

First, Ieng Thirith's unfitness to stand trial is not fatal to the larger justice-seeking process currently under way at the ECCC in Case 002 and will hopefully reinforce the need for the court to move forward in the case against other Khmer Rouge leaders with all urgency.

The treatment Ieng Thirith has received can also be a symbol of defiant compassion as a powerful counterpoint to the complete lack of compassion demonstrated by the Khmer Rouge regime.

Some satisfaction can be salvaged from victims being stripped of the opportunity to hold Ieng Thirith to account in a court of law by refusing to compromise basic fair-trial standards, even in the face of the horrific crimes she stands accused of.

Moreover, the complex mental-health issues at play at the ECCC can be used to underscore the ongoing mental-health problems pervasive in Cambodia that are a legacy of the Khmer Rouge regime.

During the Khmer Rouge period, the regime fought violently against even the most basic of human emotions and viewed even the slightest sign of pain, such as a headache, as a symbol of weakness and imperialism.

People with serious mental-health issues, such as those that Ieng Thirith now suffers, were simply discarded by the regime as symbols of social weakness that needed to be excised.

Now Ieng Thirith is defiantly being shown the compassion that she actively worked to eradicate as a Khmer Rouge minister.

Although this is a painful lesson for victims, hopefully in the long run it will be seen as a small victory for justice and human dignity.

Youk Chhang is the director of the Documentation Centre of Cambodia.

CLARIFICATION

The author of the opinion piece "More power to the people" in Friday's Post was incorrectly given as Anne Lemaisre. It was written by Heng Pheakdey.

SUBSCRIBE TO SUCCESS

FREE DELIVERY TO YOUR HOME OR OFFICE

Post English
Subscription Duration	Full Price	After Discount
6 Months $10 Discount	90USD	<input type="checkbox"/> 80USD
1 Year $20 Discount	175USD	<input type="checkbox"/> 155USD

Subscriber name:
 Address:
 Phone number:
 Email:

*Promotion applies only in Phnom Penh and Siem Reap until Sept. 30, 2012

Address: Building F, 8th floor, Phnom Penh Center, Phnom Penh. Email: subscription@phnompenhpost.com Phnom Penh: 017 666 181, 017 799 942. Siem Reap: 012 223 833